The Medical Care Standards Task Force

The National Eating Disorders Association (NEDA) welcomes the Medical Care Standards Task Force, a joint effort of the National Quality Forum, the National Alliance on Mental Illness, the American Psychological Association, the American Psychiatric Association, and the American Medical Association, to develop quality measures for the treatment of eating disorders.

NEDA is committed to supporting the establishment of evidence-based quality measures for eating disorders in order to improve the care and outcomes for individuals with eating disorders and their families. We encourage healthcare providers and organizations to adopt the quality measures and to work towards continuous improvement in the care and treatment of individuals with eating disorders.

The Medical Care Standards Task Force (MCSTF) was established to develop evidence-based quality measures for the treatment of eating disorders. The task force is comprised of experts in the field of eating disorders, including healthcare providers, researchers, and patient advocates.

The MCSTF has developed a set of standards that address the diagnosis, treatment, and prevention of eating disorders. These standards are designed to improve the quality of care for individuals with eating disorders and their families.

The standards cover a range of topics, including diagnostic criteria, treatment options, and outcome measures. They are intended to guide healthcare providers in the provision of high-quality care and to support the development of evidence-based practices.

The MCSTF standards are intended to be used by healthcare providers, organizations, and regulatory bodies to improve the quality of care for individuals with eating disorders. They are available for download on the NEDA website.
